School libraries are changing to meet the literacy and information needs of 21st century students. Educators and school librarians ensure that students have both an adequate level of literacy and can function in today's digital and information-rich world. They also nurture the joy of curling up with a good, old fashioned paper book.

CREC's Library Media Specialist Council is committed to supporting media specialists as they work to provide relevant and rigorous library programming to students throughout greater Hartford. The council's mission is to help librarians remain current on educational policies and innovations that are relevant to those services.

The council strives to facilitate an effective and collaborative professional community of school librarians, and it offers a variety of convenient and high-quality opportunities for school librarians to learn and grow and share ideas that will help transform their learning environments.

All sessions are provided at no cost to CREC districts.
Monthly registration is available online.
